Santa Ana Furniture Retailer Introduces Expandable Transformer Table to Address Housing Constraints

December 16, 2025

SANTA ANA, CA - December 16, 2025 -
Ornate Home, a furniture retailer in Santa Ana, CA has introduced its Variable-Space Transformer Table collection to address flexible living solutions in Orange County's housing market. The collection responds to current market conditions in which high property prices and limited inventory are prompting families to maximize existing square footage.

The transformer dining set reflects a broader industry shift as consumers address space constraints through multifunctional furniture. According to Global Market Insights, the global multifunctional furniture market was valued at $15.9 billion in 2024 and is projected to grow at 4.9% annually through 2034, driven by rapid urbanization and smaller living spaces.

According to Redfin's December 2025 housing market report, the median sale price per square foot in Santa Ana is $596, up 3.5% year-over-year. In this market context, families are increasingly seeking furniture solutions that maximize existing square footage rather than pursuing home expansion. The ability to repurpose a dining area for work, play, and entertaining allows homeowners to maximize the use of existing square footage without renovation or expansion.

"We're seeing firsthand how Santa Ana families are approaching their space challenges differently," said Mehmet Uncuoglu, CEO of Ornate Home. "Rather than searching for larger homes, residents are reimagining how their current spaces function. Our Transformer Table collection enables a single room to serve multiple purposes throughout the day?from morning workspace to afternoon play area to evening dining room. This flexibility addresses the real constraint families face in today's market."

The Variable-Space collection features tables that expand and contract, accommodating seating for two to ten people. This flexibility can be particularly useful for multi-generational households and those with accessory dwelling units, both growing household types in Orange County. The expandable mechanism allows homeowners to adapt a single room to serve different functions throughout the day.

Ornate Home Santa Ana presents the Transformer Table collection as part of a significant shift toward flexible living spaces in California residential design. According to The File Group, a Newport Beach real estate firm, the concept of flexible living is taking center stage in 2025 Orange County homes, with spaces being designed to support multiple functions within a single footprint. The collection directly addresses this local trend by serving Orange County residents who need formal dining capacity for holidays and entertaining while requiring practical daily-use space throughout the rest of the year.

The market conditions in Santa Ana have created significant challenges where families are looking for practical solutions to make their homes work better for their needs," said Mehmet Uncuoglu, CEO of Ornate Home. "We're seeing customers who value adaptable furniture because it helps them get more everyday use out of the space they already have."

The showroom at 2235 N Tustin Avenue offers hands-on demonstrations of the transformer mechanisms, allowing customers to experience the functionality and quality before purchase. This in-person experience provides assurance about durability and ease of use for customers considering the collection.
