OLD BRIDGE, NJ - June 11, 2026 -
All American Jerr-Dan Wreckers and Carriers has announced expanded inventory availability and service support for commercial towing companies, roadside assistance operators, and transport businesses throughout Central New Jersey. The company stated that the updated operational focus includes expanded tow truck inventory, additional repair support, expanded service capabilities, and continued investment in commercial towing operations designed for daily recovery and transport work.

Based in Old Bridge, New Jersey, All American Jerr-Dan Wreckers and Carriers operates as an authorized Jerr-Dan dealer and commercial truck center serving operators throughout Old Bridge, Sayreville, East Brunswick, South River, Edison, Woodbridge, and nearby communities. The family-owned business offers wreckers, rollback carriers, commercial tow trucks, replacement parts, fleet repairs, and mobile service support for towing companies managing roadside recovery and transport assignments.

According to the company, the expanded service approach reflects growing demand from commercial towing operators seeking recovery vehicles, replacement parts availability, and long-term commercial towing support throughout New Jersey?s active transportation corridors.

Commercial towing businesses throughout the region continue facing operational pressure tied to roadway traffic, accident response demands, municipal towing requirements, and commercial vehicle transport activity. Fleet downtime caused by delayed repairs or unavailable tow trucks can affect scheduling and roadside response capabilities. All American Jerr-Dan Wreckers and Carriers stated that the recent operational improvements include expanded tow truck inventory, additional service capacity, and increased availability of commercial towing equipment and support services.

The company reported that inventory availability remains a central component of its current operational strategy. As an authorized Jerr-Dan dealer, All American Jerr-Dan Wreckers and Carriers maintains a large inventory of rollback carriers, wreckers, and commercial tow trucks. Commercial operators can compare equipment designed for roadside assistance, accident recovery, vehicle transport, and towing operations. According to the company, the expanded inventory includes additional rollback carriers, wreckers, and commercial tow trucks available for commercial operators evaluating fleet additions or replacement vehicles.

The company also noted continued investment in its service and parts departments. Certified technicians operating within a commercial truck service center provide inspections, repairs, preventative maintenance, and fleet servicing support for commercial towing operators. In addition to in-house repair services, mobile service support remains available for businesses requiring assistance at roadside locations or commercial facilities.

?The towing industry relies on specialized equipment, parts availability, repair services, and ongoing fleet support,? the company stated. ?Commercial operators often require access to wreckers, rollback carriers, replacement components, maintenance services, and equipment information as part of their daily operations.?

The company stated that ongoing support for commercial towing operators remains a major priority within the updated service structure. Towing companies frequently require continued access to replacement components, repair scheduling, maintenance assistance, and service coordination across multiple recovery vehicles.

Dedicated parts and repair coordination remain part of the company's service structure for commercial towing operators and fleet customers.

In addition to Jerr-Dan recovery vehicles, All American Jerr-Dan Wreckers and Carriers also supports commercial operators working with multiple truck brands commonly used throughout the towing industry. Customers can access support involving Peterbilt, Freightliner, Hino, Dodge Ram, and additional commercial truck platforms used for recovery and transport operations.

The company also continues assisting operators exploring financing support for fleet upgrades and recovery vehicle purchases. Financing assistance remains available for rollback carriers, wreckers, and commercial tow trucks used for roadside assistance and transport operations. According to the company, financing programs are available for qualifying purchases involving rollback carriers, wreckers, and commercial tow trucks.

Roadside recovery operators throughout Central New Jersey continue managing increasing transportation activity, accident response demands, municipal towing assignments, and commercial hauling support across heavily traveled roadways. Many towing companies require recovery vehicles capable of supporting daily towing operations under demanding roadside conditions. The company stated that the expanded inventory and service support structure was implemented in response to continued transportation activity and towing-related service requirements throughout the region.

All American Jerr-Dan Wreckers and Carriers also emphasized the value of its family-owned operational structure and experienced industry staff. The company stated that its staff works with commercial customers regarding equipment selection, repair scheduling, parts inquiries, and fleet-related operational requirements.

The company indicated that additional operational improvements may continue as transportation and roadside recovery demands evolve throughout New Jersey communities. Continued focus on tow truck inventory availability, certified repair support, mobile service capabilities, replacement parts access, and commercial towing operations remains central to the company?s long-term operational strategy.
